We may only have the vaguest of images in our minds about what we don't know but we can be sure that there is more to know >>>... A: The default styles for a div element include font-size: 1em, line-height: 1.2, which includes a 1em "pixel" per line. So if you have a div with 10 lines, you have a 10px height per line. In your example, you have these declarations: div { font-size: 14px; line-height: 40px; margin-bottom: 20px; } This means you have a "pixel" of 40px per line. There are 1.2 (default) lines in a normal column, so you have a 40px height per line. You can change the default margins of a div by setting the margin-bottom property. For example, for your CSS, you could have this: You can see this in action here: for the filter function if isinstance(f, numpy.ndarray): f = np.array(f) f = f.reshape(f.shape[:-1] +

(1,) f = _asarray(f) if isinstance(g, numpy.ndarray): g = np.array(g) g = 82157476af
